Question Label : Comprehension

Read the passage given below and answer the question nos. 1 to 10.

Buddhism is not a monolithic entity. It is rather a tradition from which people who consider themselves Buddhists draw inspiration and to which they add as they respond to the problems of their lives, sometimes reformulating the doctrine in new ways to make it more relevant, sometimes returning to earlier principles when they seem to be timely or in danger of becoming lost. The tradition is thus a history of what Buddhist think and do.

Siddhartha Gautama, the prince of the Shakya clan who became the Buddha, was a product of his time fervent religious and spiritual exploration. The quest for mystery and magic was a prominent, even dominant, feature of this exploration.

In the centuries before the time of Buddha, the Vedic civilization flourished through the leadership of the traditional aristocratic and religious elite in a clan – and caste- based agrarian society. As the eastward exploration of the subcontinent opened up new frontiers for Vedic society, it brought new challenges to the entrenched religious elite. The most potent of these challenges – intellectually and religiously – came from the rise of asceticism.
