(10 × 1 = 10)

The Manager of an Office in Shelford was a hard working man who never arrived late and never left early. But one very important quality of men in good position he had never learnt and that quality was politeness. He never took the trouble to be polite. He never considered the feelings of the staff. If he wanted something done, he did not say 'Do you mind doing this?' He gave an order 'Do this and be quick about it'. When he failed to hear a question, he was asked he never said 'I beg your pardon?' The words 'Please and Thank you' formed no part of his conversation.

If he had spoken gently, the work of the office would be done just as well, and probably better, for the staff was a good one. But, one after another they left and found work elsewhere. No one could tell the manager why they left. So, he never understood the Art of speaking politely.

Even his chief clerk Hollis, who had been with him for many years, was getting tired of his rough way of speaking. The Secretaries, the typists, even the office boy had often complained to Hollis and begged him to tell the manager about it but, he never mustered courage to do it. One Friday evening, he suddenly got an opportunity. Hollis had worked hard for several nights on some difficult papers that the manager wanted on Friday. It had needed a great effort to get them finished but Hollis had succeeded in doing it. He brought them into the manager's office and laid them on his desk, thinking that this time he might receive a word of praise. The manager looked at them and said nothing.

As the Chief Clerk reached the door on his way out of the office he turned around and said 'I beg your pardon, sir?' 'I didn't speak' said the manager sharply. 'Oh !' said Hollis, 'I thought you said Thank You'.

- a) What important quality did the manager lack?
- b) What did the staff expect from Hollis?
- c) Why were there frequent changes in the office staff?
- d) Why did Hollis not tell the manager anything?
- e) What were the terms used to convey politeness?
- f) What had Hollis worked on?
- g) What did he expect from the manager for his hard work?
- h) What was the reaction of the manager for Hollis hard work?
- i) Hollis said, 'I beg your pardon sir', because
 - i) he was a polite man
 - ii) he had not heard what the manager had said
 - iii) he was creating an opportunity for himself to teach the manager a lesson.
- j) Add a prefix to the word 'Polite' to form an antonym.
