Andragogy on the other hand refers to the theory of adult learning and explains why adults learn differently from other types of learners. Andragogy is the art and science of helping adults learn, where ‘andra’ means adult and ‘agogos’ learning (Knowles, 1984). It is further suggested that andragogy is an approach to learning and a system of concepts that is focused on the learner. The teacher is the facilitator of learning, rather than dispenser of knowledge utilizing a present curriculum with rigid guidelines. The experience is learner - centred with the learner participating in the planning of the experience, by determining what needs to be learned, formulating the learning objectives, designing the learning plan and evaluating their meaning.
