Read the passage given below and answer the questions that follow:

It was eleven o'clock in the morning in the city of Bagdad. Captain Crosbie stopped a rapidly running boy with an armful of newspapers and bought one. He turned the corner of Bank Street and came into Rashid Street which is the main street of Baghdad, running through it for about four miles parallel with the river Tigris.

Captain Crosbie glanced at the headlines in the paper, tucked it under his arm, walked for about two hundred yards and then turned down a small alleyway and into a large khan or court. At the farther side of this he pushed open the door with a brass plate and found himself in an office.

A neat young Iraqi clerk left his typewriter and came forward smiling a welcome.

“Good morning, Captain Crosbie. What can I do for you?”

“Mr. Darkin in his room? Good, I'll go through.”

He passed through a door, up some very steep stairs and along a rather dirty passage. He knocked at the end door and a voice said, "Come in."

It was a high, rather bare room. There was an oil stove with a saucer of water on top of it, a long, low cushioned seat with a little coffee table in front of it and a large rather shabby desk. The electric light was on and the daylight was carefully excluded. Behind the shabby desk was a rather shabby man, with a tired and indecisive face—the face of one who has not got on in the world and knows it and has ceased to care.

Read the poem given below and answer the questions that follow:

It is my turn to say quiet
It is my turn to talk
I can't stand your talking anymore
For you speak in parables
But I will speak in plain language
It is my turn to cause a quake in your head

It is my turn
It is my turn to sing my own song
It is my turn to dance to it
When you sing I don't understand
And your dance has no meaning
Come and let me show you how to sing
The beautiful songs of my land
The warrior's chant
Which you can't
The melodious voice
Which you don't
Come and let me show you the dance of my land

The movement of the feet
Which you can't
The speech of the hands
Which you don't
The rhythm of nature
The tickling of the soul
The calling of the ancestors
The mingling with the spirits
The warrior's dance
The fisherman's dance
The farmer's dance
The hunter's dance
The dance of unity
