The following is an extract from a famous novel. Read it carefully and answer the question Nos. 98, 99, 100:

An overcast September evening, just at nightfall, saw beneath its drooping eyelid Mrs. Sparsit glide out of her carriage, pass down the wooden steps of the little station into a stony road, cross it into a green lane, and become hidden in a summer growth of leaves and branches. One or two late birds sleepily chirping in their nests and a bat heavily crossing and recrossing her, and the reek of her own tread in the thick dust that felt like velvet, were all Mrs. Sparsit heard or saw until she very softly closed a gate.

She went up to the house, keeping within the shrubbery, and went round it, peeping between the leaves at the lower windows. Most of them were open, as they usually were in such warm weather, but there were no lights yet, and all was silent. She tried the garden with no better effect. She thought of the wood and stole towards it—heedless of long grass and briars, of worms, snails and slugs, and all the creeping things that be. With her dark eyes and her hook nose warily in advance of her, Mrs. Sparsit softly crossed her way through the thick undergrowth, so intent upon her object that she probably would have done no less, if the wood had been a wood of adders.

98. Why does the September evening seem to have 'drooping eyelid'? Choose the correct answer.

- (a) Because just at nightfall the September evening is already feeling sleepy.
 - (b) Because the sky is 'overcast', it seems to have 'drooping eyelid'.
 - (c) It has 'drooping eyelid' because it is tired and indifferent, not much interested in the pursuit of Mrs. Sparsit.
 - (d) It is feeling sleepy because all the flora and fauna around are feeling sleepy.
- (A) (a) and (b) are correct
 - (B) (c) is incorrect
 - (C) (d) is correct
 - (D) (a), (b) and (c) are correct

99. What does not show that Mrs. Sparsit is self-composed and determined?

- (A) The way she moves bravely through the dark wood.
- (B) She ignores all the hindrance in her way.
- (C) The way she is heedless of the creepy sensations produced by the warm and slimy creatures.
- (D) Only if the 'wood of adders' – an image of danger and repugnance had been so repulsive, she would have dropped her project.

100. Whose point of view emerges from the passage?

- (A) It is the point of view of Mrs. Sparsit.
- (B) It is entirely presented through the 'eyes' of the September evening.
- (C) It is presented from the point of view of Nature.
- (D) It is the authorial point of view.
