(ii) All questions are compulsory. Read the questions carefully for internal choice

Note: Read the passage given below and answer the questions that follow:

1. Scientists have recently developed a gel that help brain recover from traumatic injuries, such as those suffered in combat, car accidents, falls, or gunshot wounds. This gel, created by Dr. Ning Zhang at Clemson University in South Carolina, is injected in liquid form at the injury site, stimulating the growth of stem cells.
2. Brain injuries are notoriously difficult to repair because the damaged tissues tend to swell, causing additional harm to the surrounding cells. Traditional treatments have focused on minimizing this secondary damage by lowering the temperature or relieving pressure at the injury site, though these methods have often been ineffective.
3. Recently, scientists have explored transplanting donor brain cells to repair damaged tissue. However, this approach has shown limited success, as the donor cells often fail to grow or stimulate repair due to inflammation and scarring at the injury site. Additionally, the injury site usually has a limited blood supply and connective tissue, hindering the donor cells from receiving the necessary nutrients.
4. Dr. Zhang's gel can be customized with different chemicals to stimulate various biological processes at the injury site. In previous studies on rats, she used the gel to restore full blood supply to the brain injury site, potentially creating a more favourable environment for donor cells. In a subsequent study, Dr. Zhang loaded the gel with immature stem cells and the necessary chemicals for their development into adult brain cells. Rats with severe brain injuries treated with this mixture for eight weeks showed significant recovery. The new gel holds promise for treating patients at various stages of injury and is expected to be ready for human testing in about three years.

Q.1 (A) Choose the correct answer from the given options:

[1x5=5]

- I The brain-repair gel was created by....
- | | |
|-------------------|--------------------|
| a) Dr. Ning Li | b) Dr. Zhang Wei |
| c) Dr. Ning Zhang | d) Dr. Susan Clark |

II The gel was developed at.....

- a) Harvard University b) Clemson University
- c) Oxford University d) Yale University

III Traditional treatments for brain injuries are often ineffective because....

- a) they cause more swelling.
- b) they increase brain temperature.
- c) they relieve pressure or reduce temperature.
- d) they lead to permanent damage.

IV Donor cells often fail to grow in the injured brain tissue because/ because of...

- a) the brain rejects all donor cells.
- b) lack of oxygen in the body.
- c) poor blood supply and inflammation at the injury site.
- d) the stem cells are too mature.

V The gel improves the environment for donor cells as.....

- a) it replaced the need for surgery.
- b) it repaired bones as well as brain tissue.
- c) it helped restore blood supply and supported stem cell growth.
- d) it reduced pain but not swelling.

B. Answer the following questions:

[1x5=5]

- i. What is the primary function of the gel developed by Dr. Zhang?
- ii. How is the gel applied to the injury?

Read the passage given below and answer the questions that follow:

1. Much before medical science discovered it, the magazine 'Reader's Digest' came out with the prescription-laughter is the best medicine. Newspapers and magazines which regularly run humour columns are doing their bit to keep the readers in good health. Reading light articles, whether they are satirical, comical or just humorous, relieves the tedium of this competitive world.
2. It is said that if you laugh for ten minutes, you will be in a better position to put up with the pain for two hours. According to US researches, laughter tones up the system and is a good antidote to stress. Facial laughter -muscles instruct the brain to feel good, regardless of how you feel.
3. According to a French doctor, laughter deepens breathing, improves blood-circulation and speeds up the process of tissue-healing. In short, it acts as a powerful drug with no side-effect. It is also found that laughter stimulates natural pain- killers in the body & improves digestion. Some people in France have made it a career. You can hire a jovialist, who cracks jokes and laughs and promises to make you dissolve your worries in helpless laughter.
4. A word of caution, although laughing is a good exercise, laughing at others' expense, particularly at their disabilities, is in bad taste and is to be avoided. Secondly, laughing with food in the mouth is dangerous as food can get into the windpipe and choke the respiratory system.
